US dollar tries to bottom again; the bounce needs to clear nearby trend resistance to gain credibility

- EUR/USD has turned lower from the 1.1743-1.1881 cluster of medium-term resistance levels, but lacks a clear bearish trend reversal pattern at this point. Look to 1.1466-1.1537 as key short-term bull trend support. Given the broader US dollar technical signals, we would respect a break of that support if one were to occur this summer.
- Cable approaches key trend support at 1.3376-1.3497 after the 2025 rally stalled near key medium-term pattern resistance. The market has shown signs of rally fatigue through the spring, so we would respect a breakdown if one were to occur this summer. We see the 1.319-1.3148 area as the first medium-term support zone for the pair.
- The bearish USD/JPY consolidation between 139-141 support and below 148-150 resistance on the heels of the 2025 slide favors a breakdown in 2H25.
- AUD/USD maintains a positive short-term trend bias while above the 0.6486 50-day moving average despite the repeated momentum divergence sell signals. Look to the 0.634-0.6486 area as critical for the medium-term outlook going forward.
- USD/KRW forms a multi-week base pattern at longer-term support levels near 1350. A break above 1385-1390 would confirm a medium-term trend reversal and set the market up for a broader retracement of the Apr-Jul slide. We see 1427-1434 as a likely ceiling for the second half of the year.

Figure 1: The DXY Index bounces after triggering our pattern-based buy signals on the weekly time frame, which have a decent track record of producing mean reversion rallies over the subsequent two month periods (65% hit-rate). Medium-term bulls need to clear a sequence of resistance levels at 98.29, 98.87, and 99.42-99.58 to gain traction.

EUR/USD turns lower from resistance, but lacks a clear bearish trend reversal pattern

The technical setups for the broad US dollar and several of the major pairs have been something of a broken clock since early June, with the 2025 trends showing some signs of exhaustion that has often led to periods of consolidation historically. However, most of those trends have extended to some degree over the past few weeks, with EUR/USD having presented one of the more dynamic trends. That market has recently turned down from the medium-term resistance zone we've highlighted that includes the 1.1743 Jan 2021 78.6% retrace, 1.1791 Sep 2022 channel, and 1.1881 Sep 2022-Feb 2025 equal swings objective (Figure 2). That area also roughly aligns with the zone from which the pair broke down from in late 2021. While we do not see a clear bearish reversal pattern on the EUR/USD chart, the DXY Index did trigger weekly momentum divergence signals ahead of the July rebound. Since 1990, those signals have had a 65% success rate, for which the index traded higher over the subsequent 2-month period. Given the persistent 2025 trend, we would not look to get aggressively bearish on EUR/USD at this point, but the setup does suggest giving a lot of respect to a break below the 1.1466-1.1537 key short-term trend support zone if that occurs. We would look to the 1.1214-1.1276 2024 range highs as the first medium-term support layer if the market were to break trend this summer. On the upside, a continued rally through the noted medium-term resistance zone would turn our attention to the 1.202 Jul 2008 38.2% retrace.

Figure 2: EUR/USD has turned lower from the 1.1743-1.1881 cluster of medium-term resistance levels, but lacks a clear bearish trend reversal pattern at this point. Look to 1.1466-1.1537 as key short-term bull trend support. Given the broader US dollar technical signals, we would respect a break of that support if one were to occur this summer.

Cable approaches key bull trend support at 1.3376-1.3497 after the 2025 rally stalled near key resistance

For the third time since Apr, GBP/USD turned lower from key channel and trend-line resistance after triggering a cluster of momentum divergence sell signals on the daily time frame. Each time before, the pair held key short-term support, which included the 50-day moving average. Well, the recent setback is now approaching key short-term support that includes the 50-day moving average again, at 1.3376-1.3497 (Figure 3). Time will tell whether the pair is finally set to stage a more significant retracement of the 2025 rally, or if the July move is another false start to such a move. On the bearish side of the technical ledger, the springtime price action looks like a bearish wedge pattern that represents trend exhaustion. The pattern's location near major channel and equal swings resistance fits. The market also triggered a set of momentum divergence signals on the weekly time frame in Jun-Jul. Countering those bearish signals, medium-term trend momentum has been powerful, and despite the bearish technicals that developed earlier in the spring, the pair has just pressed higher after only short-lived pullbacks. The inability for bears to make anything out of those earlier pullbacks leaves us hesitant to get overly negative at the moment. But we would definitely respect a breakdown below nearby trend support, and we suggest reacting aggressively if one were to occur this summer. We see the 1.319-1.3148 cluster of Fibonacci retracement levels near the May low as the first medium-term support layer.

Figure 3: Cable approaches key trend support at 1.3376-1.3497 after the 2025 rally stalled near key medium-term pattern resistance. The market has shown signs of rally fatigue through the spring, so we would respect a breakdown if one were to occur this summer. We see the 1.319-1.3148 area as the first medium-term support zone for the pair.

We expect USD/JPY bounces to continue to fade at sub-150 resistance levels

USD/JPY continues to trade in a well-defined range above major longer-term range support surrounding 140 and below the 148.80-149.68 medium-term resistance zone (Figure 4). The 200-day moving average and a cluster of Fibonacci retracement levels define the latter. We suspect that resistance will continue to mark range resistance this summer, and would fade short-term rallies into it. The spring-summer consolidation just above the 2023-2025 pattern support levels near 140 raise the prospects for a 2H25 breakdown, as the holding pattern follows the impulsive weakness from the 158.87 Jan 2025 high. The broader multi-year range also follows a near decade-long bull market. In our view, the 2023-2025 USD/JPY range thus presents a potential distribution pattern. While there are some initial breakdown support levels in the mid-130s, the multi-year top pattern would suggest a protracted multi-quarter and even multi-year bear trend if support near 140 gives way.

Figure 4: The bearish USD/JPY consolidation between 139-141 support and below 148-150 resistance on the heels of the 2025 slide favors a breakdown in 2H25.

AUD/USD continues to grind higher within a clouded technical setup

The AUD/USD rally extends despite continued signs of trend deceleration and chews through the 0.6535-0.655 cluster of Fibonacci resistance levels. Despite the brief whipsaw in late Jun, the pair has also held above the 50-day moving average since early April. While the continued bearish momentum divergence signals that have been triggered repeatedly on the daily time frame since late April make it hard to have a high-conviction bullish technical bias, on balance the persistent strength and ability to move deep into the 2023-2024 range favor a positive trend bias while above the 0.6486 50-day moving average. Look to the 0.6402 200-day moving average and 0.6344 late-Apr/early-May range low as key levels for the medium-term bias going forward (Figure 5). The next resistance sits at the 0.6683-0.6727 retracement confluence and longer-term trend line. Broader range resistance sits in the 0.69-handles.

Figure 5: AUD/USD maintains a positive short-term trend bias while above the 0.6486 50-day moving average despite the repeated momentum divergence sell signals. Look to the 0.634-0.6486 area as critical for the medium-term outlook going forward.

USD/KRW forms a base pattern near key trend-line support and looks set to retrace some of the Apr-Jul slide

USD/KRW bounces to test the 1375 50-day moving average after triggering a cluster of momentum divergence buy signals as the market based near the 1350 Jan 2021 trend line and 1346 Dec-Apr top pattern objective (Figure 6). Also note the 1331 Jan 2021 38.2% retrace as another longer-term support level in that same area. In our view, a break above the 50-day MA and 1385-1390 pattern resistance levels just overhead would confirm a medium-term trend reversal, with next resistance at the 1400 Apr 38.2% retrace. We seek the 1427-1434 area as a likely ceiling for the pair through the second half of 2025. That zone includes the Dec-Apr pattern breakdown, May-Jul base pattern measured move objective, and Apr 61.8% retrace.

Figure 6: USD/KRW forms a multi-week base pattern at longer-term support levels near 1350. A break above 1385-1390 would confirm a medium-term trend reversal and set the market up for a broader retracement of the Apr-Jul slide. We see 1427-1434 as a likely ceiling for the second half of the year.

J.P. Morgan uses the following rating system: Overweight (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will outperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe); Neutral (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will perform in line with the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe); and Underweight (over the duration of the price target indicated in this report, we expect this stock will underperform the average total return of the stocks in the Research Analyst's, or the Research Analyst's team's, coverage universe. NR is Not Rated. In this case, J.P. Morgan has removed the rating and, if applicable, the price target, for this stock because of either a lack of a sufficient fundamental basis or for legal, regulatory or policy reasons. The previous rating and, if applicable, the price target, no longer should be relied upon. An NR designation is not a recommendation or a rating. In our Asia (ex-Australia and ex-India) and U.K. small- and mid-cap Equity Research, each stock's expected total return is compared to the expected total return of a benchmark country market index, not to those Research Analysts' coverage universe.
