Dear clients,

The Bitcoin 2024 Conference in Nashville on July 25-27 unveiled several new market narratives, particularly as the US elections remain top of mind for many investors. In our view, the most substantial announcements were those supporting a potential US strategic bitcoin reserve, though the formation of such holdings at a sovereign level can be an involved process. Meanwhile, we've been seeing more bipartisan efforts to strengthen relations with the crypto community, representing a meaningful shift for the asset class. Former President Donald Trump spoke at Bitcoin 2024, while members of the Democratic party sent a letter to the Democratic National Committee (DNC) urging them to take a more pro-crypto stance.

Meanwhile, up until recently, macro has been less relevant for crypto performance, but jitters over US economic growth seem to be weighing on investor sentiment far more than optimism over potential Fed rate cuts later this year. Separately, spot ETH ETFs in the US have seen $1.5B in gross inflows, but a net $483M in outflows over their first seven trading days. This was driven by $1.98B in withdrawals from Grayscale Ethereum Trust (ETHE). However, we think these figures do not capture the nuances of how these products differ from the launch of spot BTC ETFs only eight months prior.

Finally, there are some important technical factors to be mindful of. Large onchain movements on July 29 ignited concerns that $2 billion in previously-seized crypto that the US government reportedly moved to new wallets could be headed for the open market. Looking ahead, seasonality also hasn't typically worked in crypto's favor for the month of August, which in recent years has been accompanied by lower market activity.
