Dear clients,

The signal-to-noise ratio for crypto markets is very low at the moment, as positive idiosyncratic developments for the industry have been overshadowed by geopolitical tensions, tariffs and concerns over US economic growth. Fortunately, it appears that some of those narratives have subsided ahead of the White House Crypto Summit on March 7 (1:30 pm to 5:30 pm EST). The event marks the next major crypto catalyst to watch in the near term, particularly following President Trump's executive order (last night) to create a Strategic Bitcoin Reserve and US Digital Asset Stockpile.

Meanwhile, the SEC has enacted several favorable actions for the crypto industry, including dismissing lawsuits, providing regulatory clarity on memecoins, seeking engagement with industry stakeholders, and expanding their crypto task force. On the regulatory front, the CME also announced the launch of SOL futures on March 17, making it the third cryptocurrency after BTC and ETH with a CME futures product.

Finally, we released a report on The Lending Landscape in crypto, breaking down the central role that financing solutions serve in the crypto market. At the same time, we analyze how onchain lending markets can serve as useful market indicators due to their variable rate mechanisms and public position data, but also recognize the advantages of more traditional institutional financing solutions for different use cases.
