

Weekly Market Commentary

Dear clients,

The thaw in US-China trade relations has helped boost investor sentiment over the last week, with the optimism reflected in notable appreciation across BTC and select altcoins. This was reinforced by the US administration's $600B commercial deal with Saudi Arabia earlier this week, suggesting there's still momentum on the trade diplomacy front. Meanwhile, ETH experienced a mostly technically-driven surge that reflected massive offside positioning, short covering and subsequent regrossing, as the token caught up to peers like BTC and SOL.

Recent US Senate efforts to pass the GENIUS Act, a stablecoin bill, faced procedural hurdles last week, but bipartisan negotiations are ongoing with a new cloture vote scheduled for May 19th. The Executive Director of the President's Council of Advisors for Digital Assets Bo Hines expressed optimism this week that both a stablecoin bill and market structure legislation could be passed before August 2025. Additionally, a discussion draft of a crypto market structure bill was released by the US House Committee on Financial Services and the House Committee on Agriculture on May 5, opening it up for public comment.

Finally, we recently published our "Monthly Outlook: Dethroning the Dollar," where we discuss how the current shifts in the global monetary regime alongside declining USD dominance could significantly enhance bitcoin's role as a store-of-value asset. This could potentially add $1.2T to bitcoin's total market cap over the long run. Read more here. Note that we will not have a weekly report on May 23, but will return on May 30.
