Dear clients,

Coinbase's third-annual State of Crypto Summit gathered industry leaders, policymakers, and financial visionaries to shape the future direction of the asset class. The event featured in-depth discussions on the transformative power of stablecoins—highlighting their role in making payments faster, cheaper, and more secure—as well as the evolving landscape of crypto investing, with top investors exploring the themes of long-term utility and risk management. Sessions also addressed crypto's growing political influence, with strategists from both major US parties underscoring its emergence as a pivotal issue that crosses traditional divides. Meanwhile, panels on onchain trading and derivatives showcased how institutions are bringing traditional markets onto the blockchain, signaling a new era for financial innovation.

The summit also focused on the path to mainstream adoption, with product leaders from Coinbase and partners like Shopify outlining ambitious goals to bring a billion users onchain through new products and partnerships. Notable voices, including NFL star Saquon Barkley, discussed crypto as a vehicle for economic empowerment, while industry leaders from firms like BlackRock examined the opportunities and challenges for organizations navigating the evolving financial landscape. Ultimately, the event highlighted crypto's increasing significance in both financial markets and policy discussions, setting an agenda that prioritizes innovation, regulatory clarity, and broader adoption.

Finally, we just published our Monthly Outlook: Three Themes for 2H25, where we lay out the reasons behind our constructive views, buoyed by a relatively sanguine US growth outlook, Fed rate cuts, increased corporate adoption of crypto and progress on US regulatory clarity. While risks such as potential yield curve steepening and forced selling pressures from publicly-traded crypto vehicles exist, we think that these are manageable in the short-term. That said, although we're confident about bitcoin's upward trajectory even in the face of such risks, we think only select altcoins may perform well depending on their idiosyncratic circumstances.
