NVDA's Vision Coming to Life: $2T and Counting

When tracking AI capacity additions over the LTM, AI TAMs don't seem so outlandish anymore and NVDA looks like the most interesting name in our group.

When Jensen first forecast a $1T industry by the end of the decade, we admittedly balked. With the wave of announcements that have come over the last 6-9mo, we now estimate over $2T of planned spend at ~40GW of power in total. Within that, we attribute ~65-70% to compute & networking with more deals likely in the pipeline, which starts to make the updated guidance of $3-4T look much more real. Given the variation of data available for each project, we used both the conversion of 1GW=$50-60B of total spend and used the more recent 1M GPU per 2GW associated with the OpenAI deal announced last week. When summed, this equates to $1.5T of compute & networking spend and 19M GPUs, which we acknowledge isn't perfectly pro-forma. We also acknowledge that some of these dollars will go towards custom silicon but in the tracked announcements thus far there is little reference to any specific programs. We introduce an AI capacity tracker that aggregates announced compute deployments, power, and chips that we will update real time and offer to clients. We see this as a positive for all accelerator names (AVGO + AMD) but we see this largely flowing into the NVDA P&L over the next 5+ years, moving numbers materially higher and making this the most attractive name in our space. We move our price target to $240.

In Figure 1 below, we show how estimated compute and networking revenue already dwarfs hyperscaler RPO and the total announced programs are already trending towards the 2030 NVDA TAM.

U.S. Internet

When we compare these numbers to cloud/AI capex, it's very clear that numbers need to move higher. Consensus shows 22% growth in 2026E and 12% in 2027E for the 4 major hyperscalers (AMZN, MSFT, GOOGL, ORCL) plus META. These estimates have been creeping higher with each quarter for the past three years, and we expect more of the same on the back of OpenAI's recent announcements around Stargate expansion and the Nvidia funding. Perhaps a better proxy for the coming AI wave is the growth rate for the 4 major hyperscalers' backlog. This figure was trending in the 30% range for the past year and popped to 86% coming off of this last quarter (crossing to north of $1T for the first time ever), mostly a result of ORCL's backlog spike. In terms of AI adoption, ChatGPT message volumes are up 482% Y/Y in June 2025 and users (WAU) are up 250%+ per recent disclosures, a decent proxy for overall usage of AI (see: "How We Are Using AI Three Years In").

IT Hardware and Communications Equipment

The surge in compute demand is cascading across the hardware ecosystem, with switching and EMS players poised to benefit the most. Cloud capex spend has moved up significantly with our model estimating over 20% Y/Y growth for 2026 following over 50% growth in 2024 and 2025. As demand for advanced backend networks solution has skyrocketed, switching vendor ANET has emerged as a winner here and we expect that to continue. In addition, CLS is a dominant whitebox player and counts GOOG, AWS and META as major customers, with OpenAI entering on the compute side. The AI theme creates a tailwind for the EMS space given the need for outsourcing liquid cooling, optical transceivers manufacturing, and services such as rack assembly in the data center. Although this is a positive, we note EMS companies have high customer concentration risk. As for server, overall revenues move higher for companies like DELL and SMCI, but earnings growth is limited given the low-margin nature of the business.

U.S. Software

From a software perspective, the hyperscalers serve as Nvidia's largest customers in this AI buildout, and the feasibility of this production is of the utmost importance for the hundreds of billions of dollars of compute expected to be spent in the coming years. Microsoft, Oracle, and CoreWeave, among others, underpin the vast levels of investment being seen today with the large AI training clusters built on top of the data center infrastructure they provide. Incredible demand here is represented by the hundreds of billions of dollars of AI-related RPO contracted with these vendors (see table above), leading to raised top-line expectations and higher valuation multiples. Now, these vendors need to deliver on the AI infrastructure capacity to fill these contracts, which will serve as a critical aspect of the investment cases for these companies. Over time, this impact will broaden as more workloads move to inference, with software application vendors (among others) needing to successfully implement GenAI workloads into their offerings to deliver the end-user value that justifies all the investment.

Thematic Investing

Whoever wins the energy race likely wins the AI race. From our thematic perspective, there are already signs of an emerging power wall that could slow data center development, as we outlined in Powering AI: Bring Your Own Power \('BYOP'\) as AI Party Continues - Data Center Insights v3.0. According to DC Byte, global data center capacity under construction has plateaued over the past year despite a growing pipeline of projects due to power constraints and permitting issues. CBRE recently reported that data center capacity under construction in primary North American markets fell in 1H25 vs. 2H24 due to limited powered land availability and elevated build costs. Meta's new electricity use disclosure has raised the question of whether or not some of Meta's data center projects are behind schedule amid reports that Meta is using tents to temporarily house servers, as detailed in Powering AI: Meta's energy disclosure signals no slowing down. Furthermore, policy makers and regulators are increasingly pushing for data centers to bring their own power (e.g., Texas Senate Bill 6, West Virginia House Bill 2014) to help alleviate grid strain. There is also a growing list of data centers being powered by grid-independent microgrids, including xAI's Colossus 1 and 2 in Tennessee and Meta's 1-GW Prometheus data center in Ohio, due to a lack of grid power. We also worry that a lack of skilled labor, especially electricians, could weigh on data center development, as we outlined in Will Electrician Shortage Stunt the Digital & Energy Transitions?. We compile ~150 companies exposed to the 'Powering AI' theme across various tech, industrial, and energy subcategories in Powering AI: Insights across Economics, Securitized Credit, Industrials, Tech & Energy.

U.S. Power & Utilities

Power Sector Is Just Trying to Keep Up: Regulated New Build Coming... Still Need Higher Power Prices to Incentivize Spec Gen. With the power industry overall operating in a flat to declining load environment the last two decades, the shift to a mid single-digit power demand outlook across the US is creating a structural shift in the utility business model. We have noticed ~400 GWs of reported backlog across our coverage universe of opportunity vs. ~70 GWs of signed contracts for time to power in the early 2030s, whereas we continue to see companies pursue an all-of-the-above approach – pushing out coal retirements, remaining committed to current renewables spending, and accelerating as much gas CCGT / CT build as possible into the late decade. As much of this is in the regulated environment, it's subject to regulatory approvals, unique tariff structures, siting, and processes which lead to longer lead times. For jurisdictions that are long capacity with tariff frameworks already in place, we expect to see more of a near-term acceleration as industry CapEx prospects are clearly higher than anticipated out of 2Q conference calls. This includes ETR (Meta Hyperion), WEC (OpenAI/ORCL/MSFT/Vantage DC), SO (QTS). We are also expecting meaningful announcements in the Midwest which could benefit EVRG, AEE, NI, and LNT among other names. Valuations for the regulated sector are not demanding at a 16.5x consensus FY27E P/E, a 15% discount to the S&P 500. We are worried that due to the current high cost of new gas generation ($2,000–2,500/kw at $80–$105/MWh LCOE) as new capacity additions trail baseload demand ramps in the late decade, power prices could see upward revisions. Comparing to strip prices in the mid $40–55/MWh range across the country, we do not see executives pursuing speculative generation anytime soon, which is disincentivizing new build. We have seen non-regulated DC momentum in both ERCOT and PJM; our preferred ways to play this theme are NRG & TLN.

Methodology

In the table above, where we do not have data for either investment size, number of GPUs, or GW, we use the following two ratios per recent NVDA commentary:

- 1GW = $50-60B total cost.
- 10GW = 4-5M GPUs.

For example, if we have the GW of the project, we use the 1GW = $50-60B ratio and 10GW=4-5M GPUs ratio to calculate the $ investment and the GPUs required. If we do not have the GW (which is the case for many projects), we simply divide the $ investment by $55B to calculate GWs and then GPUs. We note that this likely leads to a lower / more conservative figure if the $ investment is only part of the total cost (i.e. only part of the compute/construction costs). We also don't have a conversion ratio for custom silicon but will add this data as deals come out.

Changes to Estimates

Our price target of $240 is based upon 35x our CY26E non-GAAP EPS of $6.93. Our price target would be 30x an implied EPS of ~$7.85 if you add in $35B in revenue for the recent OpenAI announcement.

Our prior price target of $200 was based upon 29x our CY26E non-GAAP EPS of $6.93. We raise our multiple to reflect potential upside from continued AI momentum and DC builds.

Guide to the Barclays Fundamental Equity Research Rating System:

Our coverage analysts use a relative rating system in which they rate stocks as Overweight, Equal Weight or Underweight (see definitions below) relative to other companies covered by the analyst or a team of analysts that are deemed to be in the same industry (the "industry coverage universe").

In addition to the stock rating, we provide industry views which rate the outlook for the industry coverage universe as Positive, Neutral or Negative (see definitions below). A rating system using terms such as buy, hold and sell is not the equivalent of our rating system. Investors should carefully read the entire research report including the definitions of all ratings and not infer its contents from ratings alone.

Stock Rating

Overweight - The stock is expected to outperform the unweighted expected total return of the industry coverage universe over a 12-month investment horizon.

Equal Weight - The stock is expected to perform in line with the unweighted expected total return of the industry coverage universe over a 12-month investment horizon.

Underweight - The stock is expected to underperform the unweighted expected total return of the industry coverage universe over a 12-month investment horizon.

Rating Suspended - The rating and target price have been suspended temporarily due to market events that made coverage impracticable or to comply with applicable regulations and/or firm policies in certain circumstances including where the Investment Bank of Barclays Bank PLC is acting in an advisory capacity in a merger or strategic transaction involving the company.

Industry View

Positive - industry coverage universe fundamentals/valuations are improving.

Neutral - industry coverage universe fundamentals/valuations are steady, neither improving nor deteriorating.

Negative - industry coverage universe fundamentals/valuations are deteriorating.

Below is the list of companies that constitute the "industry coverage universe":

Middle East: Nothing herein should be considered investment advice as defined in the Israeli Regulation of Investment Advisory, Investment Marketing and Portfolio Management Law, 1995 ("Advisory Law"). This document is being made to eligible clients (as defined under the Advisory Law) only. Barclays Israeli branch previously held an investment marketing license with the Israel Securities Authority but it cancelled such license on 30/11/2014 as it solely provides its services to eligible clients pursuant to available exemptions under the Advisory Law, therefore a license with the Israel Securities Authority is not required. Accordingly, Barclays does not maintain an insurance coverage pursuant to the Advisory Law.

Sustainable Investing Related Research: There is currently no globally accepted framework or definition (legal, regulatory or otherwise) of, nor market consensus as to what constitutes a 'sustainable', 'ESG', 'green', 'climate-friendly' or an equivalent company, investment, strategy or consideration or what precise attributes are required to be eligible to be categorised by such terms. This means there are different ways to evaluate a company or an investment and so different values may be placed on certain sustainability credentials as well as adverse ESG-related impacts of companies and ESG controversies. The evolving nature of sustainable investing considerations, models and methodologies means it can be challenging to definitively and universally classify a company or investment under a sustainable investing label and there may be areas where such companies and investments could improve or where adverse ESG-related impacts or ESG controversies exist. The evolving nature of sustainable finance related regulations and the development of jurisdiction-specific regulatory criteria also means that there is likely to be a degree of divergence as to the interpretation of such terms in the market. We expect industry guidance, market practice, and regulations in this field to continue to evolve.

Any information, data, image, or other content including from a third party source contained, referred to herein or used for whatsoever purpose by Barclays or a third party ("Information"), in relation to any actual or potential 'ESG', 'sustainable' or equivalent objective, issue, factor or consideration is not intended to be relied upon for ESG or sustainability classification, regulatory regime or industry initiative purposes ("ESG Regimes"), unless otherwise stated. Nothing in these materials, including any images included therein, is intended to convey, suggest or indicate that Barclays considers or represents any product, service, person or body mentioned in these materials as meeting or qualifying for any ESG or sustainability classification, label or similar standards that may exist under ESG Regimes. Barclays has not conducted any assessment of compliance with ESG Regimes. Parties are reminded to make their own assessments for these purposes.
