

Weekly Market Commentary

Dear clients,

Ethereum co-founder Vitalik Buterin recently released two articles discussing the future of Ethereum, focusing on the more technical aspects of the roadmap such as single slot finality and data availability. While important as a centralizing voice for a divided Ethereum community, the majority of the content remains largely academic and unlikely to be a near term market driver, in our view. On the other hand, the approaching US elections remain top of mind for market participants. We think that the odds that this could be a “wave” election dominated by a single party are not trivial and could drive the overall crypto asset class’ performance in the weeks ahead, due to the implications for the future regulatory environment.

Meanwhile, Base (a Coinbase-incubated Ethereum layer-2) has seen remarkable growth, surpassing Arbitrum in total value locked (TVL) and becoming the third most active network by decentralized exchange (DEX) volumes. In the Avalanche ecosystem, the blockchain-based game Off the Grid has also gained significant traction across multiple major platforms, utilizing a new Avalanche subnet, GUNZ, to power in-game transactions.

Finally, we published two key reports this week. The Q4 2024 Guide to Crypto Markets (created in partnership with Glassnode) compiles over 40 charts of key sector indicators to watch and highlights the quarterly themes of stablecoin growth and Ethereum L2 expansion. Also, our Analyzing Solana Activity report dives deeper into the Solana network to capture its unique activity trends and fee drivers. Our findings suggest Solana may have a distinct cohort of users from competitor networks and that its fees are more highly linked to trading activity than its peers.
