Dear clients,

Crypto markets experienced notable activity this week, highlighted by the recent surge in corporate treasury purchases – with companies like SharpLink, SOL Strategies and Trump Media & Technology announcing substantial investments in ETH, SOL and BTC, respectively. Technical demand for crypto could come from the FTX Recovery Trust’s second round of creditor repayments – exceeding $5B in stablecoins – to be paid out over the next three business days (starting May 30). We think the liquidity unlock could support stronger performance, unlike the $7B distribution in February, due to differences in the payout structure and the recent shift in the market regime.

Meanwhile, key discussions at the Bitcoin 2025 Conference in Las Vegas this week focused on bitcoin's strategic significance, as US Vice President JD Vance addressed BTC’s growing role in global competition. White House Crypto Czar David Sacks suggested a legal pathway for the US government to acquire more bitcoin, while Pakistan’s Crypto Council said it is establishing a government-led strategic bitcoin reserve. Regulatory developments are also making progress, with the US Senate expected to pass the GENIUS Act on stablecoins soon, potentially paving the way for a crypto market structure bill later this year.

Overall, the market reflects a mix of positive momentum but also some technical challenges, as evidenced by bitcoin facing some resistance after breaching a fresh all-time high. Nevertheless, US spot bitcoin ETF inflows have attracted $2.6B in the five business days ended May 28, suggesting there’s still significant underlying demand for the asset class. We break down the latest 13F filings for 1Q25 in our newsletter. Finally, we just published our guide explaining liquid vs native staking, either of which can be valuable tools for institutions looking to generate yield on idle native assets.
