Dear clients,

This week, macro factors like the imposition of a 50% tariff on copper imports, a delay in reciprocal US tariffs to August 1, and Nvidia reaching a $4T market cap seemed to drive crypto performance. Indeed, BTC reached a new all time high, consistent with our constructive 3Q25 outlook. As the U.S. House of Representatives prepares for its inaugural "Crypto Week," commencing July 14, we anticipate increased market momentum while legislators work to advance their objectives in the cryptocurrency space.

Meanwhile, letsBONK.fun has surpassed pump.fun in both (1) launchpad revenue and (2) share of tokens that have “graduated” to secondary-market trading on Solana. While overall launchpad revenue remains stable, letsBONK.fun's share has increased significantly, primarily by attracting users and high-quality launches away from pump.fun. This shift carries direct token-level consequences that benefit BONK’s supply-side tokenomics, as letsBONK.fun commits half of its fees to buying and burning BONK.

Finally, the transfer of 80,000 dormant BTC (valued at around $8.6B) last weekend (July 4) from eight P2PKH format (Pay-to-Public-Key-Hash) wallets to modern SegWit (Bech32) addresses sparked speculation about the motives behind it. Some have linked it to concerns about quantum computing’s potential to compromise bitcoin’s cryptographic security. Advances in quantum computing and cryptography research have heightened such concerns in recent months. However, our view is that quantum computing will be a catalyst for innovation and modernization, not disruption. Indeed, the crypto community is actively building for a quantum future.
